

Rosann attended her high school's 50th reunion on March 04, 2011. She looked ravishing. Twenty eight hours later she underwent emergency brain surgery to save her life. In a single day, with little warning, her life changed. Rosann has Stage 4 lung cancer and statistics say she has only a few months to live. "I'm living my life one day at a time. What else can I do? I'm not giving up."

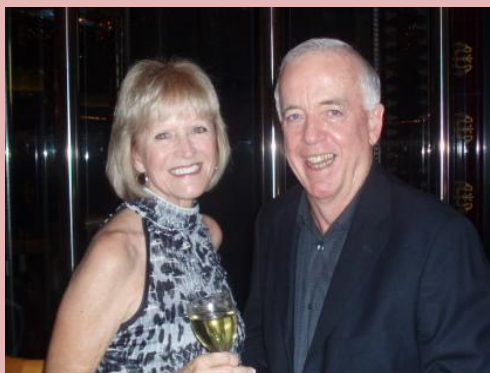

Rosann is still an attractive woman, but her priorities are different. She can't do many of the things she once could do easily; she has had to adjust her thinking. Most of her vision is gone, so golf is out, for now. Rosann is also an artist, mostly oils and acrylics. Her style was realism; now it's abstract. The painting above (right) was finished April 27th.

"This is a story of hope! It's May 2, 58 days after my surgery, and I am "Fighting Back" with all my strength, but I can't do it alone. My husband, family and friends have helped me so far. Now I need your help.

Please Pray for me."

This is Rosann's book. Jim did the writing but these are Rosann's thoughts and viewpoints. We thank the friends that contributed their thoughts and views; this is what makes this book unique.
